

My wife and I are Indiana residents and we are very pleased with the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. Since the state law was enacted, our receipt of nuisance calls has essentially been reduced to zero. We feel very strongly that the FCC should not impose new govt regulations that reduce any of the telephone privacy protection that is already being provided by the existing Indiana State law. If new FCC regulations do not enhance the protection provided by state law, then the regulations should not be imposed upon the State of Indiana.
